Is “Civility” Personal?

On one hand, civility is not personal if it is practiced and guides our relationships with others. This means we can strongly disagree, debate, and even take action, as long as we are not personally attacking others. Listen closely, find the most compatible solution, and agree to disagree.

On the other hand, civility is personal in that the well-being of all will be enhanced when the concepts of civility are practiced by all.

Cam Martian